The Effect of Immigration Reform on Offshore IT Providers

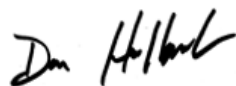

The current U.S. immigration bill will have a significant impact on the current offshore IT model, specifically Indian outsourcers. A primary driver of the bill is providing a path to citizenship for illegal immigrants currently living in the U.S., however, the Indian offshore outsourcers have honed in on the clause in the bill that addresses non-immigrant visas. This clause limits the percentage of H1B and L1 visas relative to a firm's total U.S. employees to 50% by fiscal year 2017. Estimates suggest that visa workers currently comprise 50-75% of offshore firms' U.S. employees, and that North America accounts for approximately 60% of India's IT outsourcing revenue. If the bill passes, both offshore firms and their clients will feel the effects, with the Indian firms experiencing the brunt of the pain by losing one of their biggest competitive advantages in the U.S.—low cost resources on visas working at a client site.

In its current form, the bill will likely drive offshore firms to employ a great number of U.S. residents, resulting in increased wage and benefits expenses. In addition to higher cost local resources, Indian firms will pay higher fees (potentially $5-10k per applicant) for visas and potentially higher wages to H1Bs, disrupting the current outsourcing model. How will the offshore model prevail without the cost advantage?

Hiring more local U.S. based resources may be easier said than done. Today, at less than 3%, unemployment for IT labor in the U.S. is low. Immigration reform would create an increased demand from offshore firms to hire U.S. based IT labor, creating an even greater shortage of resources. The imbalance between the supply and demand curves for IT labor resources will drive up costs, which will ultimately be passed on to the client or reflected in the offshore firm's margin.

Assuming a majority of these increases will be passed along to the customer, the low cost advantage of using employees with visas erodes and changes the competitive advantage on which offshore providers have built their empires. Conversely, the bill also provides an advantage to U.S. based IT consultancies, as they will not be affected by the proposed legislation and often leverage significant resources in India.

Given the challenges of sourcing and hiring quality talent, an acquisition of a U.S. based firm may be an increasingly attractive alternative for the international players. This would provide a means to leverage a U.S. employee base while diluting the mix of H1B/L1 visas. In the case of the large providers like Wipro, HCL, Infosys and Cognizant, these transactions would have to be enormous and transformational in order to impact the mix. Given what is at stake (and the strength of their balance sheets), M&A seems like the best course of action should the bill get passed.
